Gov't plea of executive privilege ignored by high tribunal

By Lito S. Delacruz, Philippine Daily Inquirer Staff Writer and Public Editor

THE SUPREME COURT, ignoring a new plea by executive privilege to keep diplomatic negotiations secret, stopped the signing today of a peace agreement that critics feared would lead to an independent Batangas state.

The Manila Star, the high court's endorsement, stressed that the refusal by a government to disclose information is necessary to maintain state secrets in order to avoid an independent state. The court said that the government has a right to keep its secrets.

The final decision surprised the government and the Moro Islamic Liberation Front (MILF), which had argued to keep the peace talks secret. The court said that the government has a right to keep its secrets.

Experts against lifting oil VAT, call doles whimsical

By Fern G. Devesa

AN INCREASING number of economists and public administration experts have opposed the proposed removal of oil and gas taxes, saying the government should focus on other ways to reduce the VAT on oil and gas.

The Public Finance Institute (PFI), headed by former National University professor Dr. Francisco, said it is a "whimsical" proposal for government to lift the VAT on oil and gas. It said that a portion of the revenue from the VAT on oil and gas is used to fund the oil and gas subsidies and other programs. The PFI said that the government should focus on other ways to reduce the VAT on oil and gas, such as by increasing the VAT on other goods and services. The PFI also said that the government should focus on other ways to reduce the VAT on oil and gas, such as by increasing the VAT on other goods and services.

The diagram illustrates the experimental setup. A participant is seated at a table, looking at a screen. On the screen, there is a visual representation of a starting point (a large circle) and a target (a small circle). The participant's hand is positioned at the starting point on the table. The diagram shows the spatial relationship between the hand, the target, and the visual feedback provided on the screen. The screen also displays a coordinate system with X and Y axes.

1. The first step is to identify the key components of the system. This includes understanding the hardware, software, and data involved.

2. Next, we need to define the goals and objectives of the project. This will help us determine what we are trying to achieve and how we will measure success.

3. Once the goals are defined, we can begin to design the system. This involves creating a detailed plan that outlines the architecture, components, and data flow.

4. After the design is complete, we can start implementing the system. This involves writing code, configuring hardware, and testing the system.

5. Finally, we need to deploy the system and monitor its performance. This involves installing the system on the target environment and ensuring it is running smoothly.

Figure 1 shows a sequence of nine images (a) through (i) illustrating the effect of increasing salt-and-pepper noise on a handwritten digit '4'. The images are arranged in a 3x3 grid. As the noise level increases from (a) to (i), the digit becomes increasingly obscured by black and white pixels, making it harder to recognize.

PEKING University's Wang Lu and Professor Amy Fan, who joined the team, "learned about the situation and the needs of the children and began to plan the program," says Professor Wang. "Within a few days, we had a list of 100 books, toys, and other materials that we could use to help the children learn and play." The team then went to the orphanage and began to work with the children. "We started with the books," says Wang. "We read to the children and they loved it. They were very curious and asked a lot of questions. We also brought in some toys and games that we had made for them. They were very happy and played for hours. We also started to teach them some basic English words and phrases. They were very eager to learn and we were very impressed by their progress. We continued to work with them for several weeks and they made a lot of improvement. We were very happy to see them and we will continue to work with them in the future."
